

SLEEPING SURFACE HAVING TWO LONGITUDINALLY CONNECTED BLADDERS

ABSTRACT

A sleep surface is formed by joining longitudinal sides of two juxtaposed air bladders, thereby providing a continuous sleep surface having two independently inflatable air chambers. The union of the two bladders ensures that the bladders remain in a desired position despite being repeated inflated, deflated, folded and unfolded.